

What is the difference between a CV and a resume?

In the United States, a CV, or curriculum vitae, is a comprehensive document used most commonly for applying to roles within academia and research. A CV may also be required for graduate school applications, especially for Ph.D. programs. In most countries outside the U.S., the term CV and resume hold the same meaning. However, in the U.S., a resume is used for industry roles and is a more tailored document.

	CV	Resume
Purpose	Used to apply for roles within academia and research, academic-oriented fellowships and grants, and graduate school	Applications for industry jobs
Audience	Academics	Hiring managers and recruiters
Focus	Academic achievements including publications, conference presentations, research, teaching, academic awards, professional association memberships	Transferrable skills and accomplishments connected to the job you are applying for – focus should be targeted according to the job description
Length	Flexible; this is a comprehensive document	1 page, 2 pages maximum; this is a tailored, concise document
Publications & Presentations	Always include	Only include if relevant to the role you are applying for
Honors/Awards	Include all academic honors/awards	Be selective when including these on your resume

Additional Tips:

- Consult faculty within your discipline for feedback on your CV. If you are applying to a role within academia, view CVs for faculty within your discipline at multiple schools. These are usually found on the faculty webpage of the institution.
- Determine the order of your CV sections based on the role. For example, if you are applying to a teaching role, your teaching experience should be higher up on the document, whereas if you are applying to a research role, highlight that section first.
